

Every agent on our team holds the National Association of Realtors' Senior Real Estate Specialist (SRES) designation — and that matters. Earning the SRES requires specialized training in the unique financial, emotional, and lifestyle considerations that older adults and their families face when making a move. It means our agents understand the nuances of estate sales, the range of senior housing options available, and how to communicate with patience and sensitivity during what can be one of the most significant transitions of a family's life. For seniors and their loved ones, working with an SRES-designated agent means having a knowledgeable, trusted advocate in their corner — someone who listens, understands the full picture, and is committed to making the process as smooth and stress-free as possible.